SOLICITORS

Money can be saved by seeking expert help with a banking problem >>

Early in January 2004 we were contacted by a farmer who has been receiving our newsletter for some years. The farmer has his own solicitor in the country with whom he is very happy. However, he wanted an expert opinion from us, and was concerned that we might not be able to work with his local solicitor.

We were able to assure him that we were quite happy to work in conjunction with local practitioners and provide our expert guidance in banking matters.

The client had been through a mediation and the bank had not met its obligations under the mediated agreement. The bank had earlier withdrawn all of the banking facilities without notice.

We explained how the courts have dealt with the withdrawal of facilities without notice and how it was somewhat of an undecided issue but because it was an undecided issue was helpful in negotiations.

We helped with the format for the meeting that was to take place in the middle of January, and met with the client before the meeting to advise on what should be said and what approach should be taken at the meeting.

Although the client's dispute has not finally settled he was delighted with the 'tips' we were able to give him on how the negotiations would proceed, and the fact that we had no difficulty whatsoever working alongside his existing solicitor.
